TRAGIC DEATH OF G. B. MARCH GUN ACCIDENTALLY GOES OFF WHILE HE IS ON A TREE.

He Falls from Tree and is Dead
When Picked up by a Companion.

The deer hunting season ended in a tragedy that has shocked the county. Last week Geo. B. March, merchant at Hampton, in company with Associate Judge W. Howard Dicks and J. Frank March of New Chester, went to Buchanan Valley to hunt deer, making the home of John Irvin their headquarters. They had planned to start for home on Friday but before leaving to go out to the hills on a last hunt for deer. John Irvin, Judge Dicks and others started in one direction to drive any deer toward point where Geo. B. March and J. Frank March were stationed. The brush was thick at this point and George B. March concluding that he could see to better advantage over the brush, climbed into a tree about seven feet above the ground. He then asked his cousin, J. Frank, March to hand him his gun, a double barrel shot gun, carrying shell with bullet. Before his cousin handed him the gun he asked George whether he was fixed all right and answering in the affirmative the gun was handed to him stock up-wards. Before leaving him Frank March called again to him, "Are you fixed all right," and George March answered, "I'm fixed all right, you hurry up hear the drivers coming." Frank March had not gone 15 steps when he heard the crack of a shot and turning saw George March gasp. He exclaimed, "My God I'm shot," and fell out of the tree, landing on his head on the ground. When Frank March reached him he was dead. It is believed that in changing the position of the gun the trigger was pulled by a twig. The bullet entered body near right shoulder and went diagonally through body coming out on left upper side of back. It is believed the jugular vein was pierced, as he bled profusely. The body was carried to the home of John Irvin and was taken charge of by H. P. Marks, undertaker, of Arendtsville and taken to his home in Hampton.

50th Anniversary Celebration.

The War Department took a most important step last week in the appointment of an army officer to have charge of the 50th Anniversary-Celebration of the Battle of Gettysburg. An officer of large experience has been named and this community rejoices in the fact that in the seven months remaining before the celebration is due Major Normoyle will be in charge and with his wide experience in the care of crowds it can be depended upon that he will leave nothing undone within the limits of his powers and available appropriation.

On last Friday it was announced that Secretary of War, Stimson has detailed Major James E. Normoyle of the Quartermaster's Department, to have complete charge of arrangements for the semi-centennial of the battle of Gettysburg, to be held on the battlefield July 1 to 5 next.

Major Normoyle was the officer who had charge of the relief works in the vast Mississippi Valley flood district during the great flood of this year, when for a time more than 1,000,000 people had to look to the army officers for relief. Major Normoyle's work was of a character that attracted the attention and admiration of his superiors, and it is for this reason he has been selected by Secretary Stimson to take charge of the big celebration at Gettysburg, next July, when it is expected at least 50,000 veterans of the civil war will be guests of the Government and of the State of Pennsylvania for several days.

Major Normoyle will lay out the grounds on which the thousands of tents for the housing of the veterans will be pitched. He will plan and supervise the commissary department, including the hundreds of improvised kitchens and dining tents, and will have charge of all transportation facilities and everything else relating to the encampment. He will open an office at Gettysburg and begin the work of preparing for the celebration.

Thomas J. Stewart, Adjutant-General of Pennsylvania, Harrisburg, Pa., is compiling information relative to the 50th Anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg, to be held at Gettysburg, July 1st-4th, 1913, and desires the name, command, date of enlistment, date of discharge, and post office address of each surviving soldier now residing in Pennsylvania, who served in a Pennsylvania organization that participated in the Battle of Gettysburg, and who enlisted and served therein prior to July 4th, 1863.

Wm. B. Kurtz, donor of the magnificent playground park for Gettysburg visited Gettysburg last Saturday between trains, in company with Frank M. Day, architect, of Philadelphia. The playground was visited and thoroughly gone over. The land of Dr. Walter H. O'Neal, south of the run was also looked over and Mr. Kurtz directed it to be acquired. Dr. O'Neal having offered to sell it. This additional land will give nearly three more acres to the playground making a grand park of over nineteen acres for the children of the town. The O'Neal land extends to Stratton street, giving a fine entrance by that street and whenever the street on top of Baltimore Hill is extended eastward, that extension will run into the land acquired of Dr. O'Neal.

The old brickyard lane has been macadamized by the Park Commissioners as far as the southern boundary of the park and Mr. Kurtz was informed that if he would convey a strip of his land four or five feet to the United States, the avenue would be completed to Baltimore street. Mr. Kurtz at once said land would be conveyed to government.

Col. E. B. Cope has prepared contour map of the playground, giving the exact lay of the land for every foot and this map was shown Messrs. Kurtz and Day. After their inspection the best location for lodge seemed to be on high ground along lane. This lodge will provide quarters for keeper, and will contain lockers, shower baths and storage for apparatus. On the grounds will be plotted baseball diamonds, football gridirons, tennis courts, and room for every kind of outdoor game and both for the big and little boys. The purchase of the O'Neal land makes sure of the building of a lake which will be about 100 feet wide and 300 feet long, and can be used for wading, perhaps swimming, and skating in winter. Mr. Kurtz's plans have not reached such a state of completion that swimming pool can be definitely located, but it is part of his plans.

HOT FLASHES.

Women in middle age often complain of hot flashes. They are at that stage of life when their delicate organism needs a tonic and helping-hand which only Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription can give them. Many women suffer needlessly from girlhood to womanhood and from motherhood to old age—with backache, dizziness or headache. A woman often becomes sleepless, nervous, "broken-down," irritable and feels tired from morning to night. When pains and aches rack the womanly system at frequent intervals, ask your neighbor about Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

Mrs. J. IMHOFF, of 321 S. Benton Street, Baltimore, Md., says: "I wrote you about nine months ago, telling you of my condition. I have a fine baby girl—she weighed nine pounds when born. She is my third child and the strongest of them all. My suffering was only for two hours. I took several bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and one of Dr. Pierce's Smart-Weed. I never had a well day before I took your medicines. I was surprised how well I felt—could eat—was always hungry, and never had a sick stomach. The nurse who was with me said the medicine was wonderful because I got along so nicely after having had so much trouble before. She intends to recommend it to all her suffering patients. Everybody is astonished at me because I only weighed 102 pounds before and now I weigh 135. I have had several ladies come to me and ask about Dr. Pierce's medicine. I am willing to recommend it to all who suffer and want help. If any want information I will be glad to give it."

't Did Not Please French Dualists

By George C. Conant

More than half a century ago, when railroads were first beginning to be built in America, there were no railroad kings to finance them. Those in the west especially were paid for by the farmers living along the proposed line, who subscribed each for a small lot of the stock.

Zeke Tuttle, a Kentucky farmer's boy, returned from the war between the United States and Mexico, where he had served as a volunteer in a rifle corps composed chiefly of hunters, to find a railroad projected that was to run close to his father's farm. Zeke became much interested in the proposed road, which would enable his father to get his products to market and thus utilize them. The young man was a good talker and made a tour along the route that had been laid down by the engineers, for the purpose of persuading the farmers to subscribe for the stock of the company.

He met with remarkable success. This was owing to a natural gift he possessed for demonstrating the advantages that the railroad would bring to the farmer rather than to any especial willingness on his part to take his money out of the woolen stocking in which he kept it and put it into the shares of the road. When sufficient track had been laid to warrant a mortgage those interested began to look about for funds to be obtained in this way. At that time 7 per cent was the prevailing rate of interest in America, which was much higher than that paid abroad. It was therefore decided to attempt to place the stock of the road in Europe. When the directors came to look about them for a man to demonstrate the enterprise to foreigners they naturally pitched upon Zeke Tuttle for the purpose.

Zeke accepted the work offered—he was to receive his expenses and a commission—and, making the journey to New York by stagecoach, canal and other primitive methods of conveyance, crossed the ocean in a sailing vessel and one day appeared in Paris with his charts and printed information setting forth the advantages of his railroad.

He found certain bankers who were so favorably impressed with his arguments that they consented to offer his bonds to the public. One day while they were making their preparations to open the subscription books a man called on Mr. Tuttle and solicited an advertisement of the sale for his paper, the Courier des —. Tuttle declined to advertise.

The next morning an article appeared in the Courier des — warning persons not to subscribe for the bonds of the American railway since the road had not yet been built.

Unless this article were retracted by the newspaper that published it Tuttle's scheme for placing his bonds would be a failure. He called at once at the office of the Courier des — and asked to see the manager. Tuttle was a long, gaunt, rawboned American of the backwoods type, dressed in store clothes he had bought for the occasion. The manager was a carefully dressed Frenchman of aristocratic mien. An interpreter was called, and Zeke entered a protest against what he called blackmail. The manager said something in French to the interpreter, who asked Tuttle to follow him and led him to the office of an elegantly dressed man who sat in a luxurious chair reading one of Alexandre Dumas' novels. The interpreter said something in French to this gentleman, then said to Zeke:

"This is M. Cavillac, ze fighting editor of our journal. You having insulted us by accusing us of levying blackmail upon you, I have been instructed to bring you here zat you may repeat your charge if you so choose to do."

"I don't talk any French," replied the westerner, "but that's what we call such rascally proceedings in pure American."

The reply was transmitted to M. Cavillac, who gave the following rejoinder to Mr. Tuttle:

"This journal, like others, is liable to print something that will displease some one. For the purpose of satisfying such or defending its honor a gentleman is appointed to receive and give challenges to and from those who are offended or offend. Since you have applied an offensive epithet to what has been said in the columns of this paper M. Cavillac begs that you will do him the honor of giving him satisfaction in mortal combat."

"Well, I'll be jinged," was Tuttle's exclamation. "I'm goldurned if I haven't a mind to satisfy him by slapping his jaw."

"Zat would be out of order," said the interpreter. "He is armed and would shoot you."

For a moment Tuttle was thrown, so to speak, on his beam ends, but he soon rallied.

"What kind of a mortal combat is it? Rowie knives?"

"What you call zat? It is not known in Paris. But I have to inform you, monsieur, zat since you are ze challenged party you have ze choice of weapons. M. Cavillac does not care whether you choose ze sword or ze pistols."

better in the end to go the other way. Being of a venturesome disposition, the latter course pleased him the better, and he decided to go with the current instead of against it.

He had not proceeded far before he heard the jabber of voices, the rattle of side arms against canteens and tin cups, denoting that some soldiers of the retreating army were ahead of him. Thinking they would afford him a good opportunity to make his experiment of playing ghost, he urged his charger on till he came in sight of four men, whom he suspected to be those who had been sent back to find him. Hearing the patter of the donkey's little hoofs on the road, they turned.

For a moment they stood paralyzed. "Santa Maria!" whispered one to the other. "It's the miller. He must have been murdered."

"Go back!" cried out Guardet. "and bury me!" King Bomba's men have left my body in a thicket near my mill. I will haunt you till you place it underground and put a cross over it."

As he spoke he kept on at the same pace. The soldiers recoiled before him to the side of the road and as soon as he had passed began to consult as to what they should do. Not one of them dared to stand against the threat he had made in the miller's name, and, trembling, they retraced their steps and spent hours in a fruitless search for his body.

Meanwhile Guardet, encouraged at his success, rode on, keeping at a safe distance behind the advance of the retreating army, till he came to the top of a declivity from which he could look down on Palermo. He saw King Bomba's flag flying over the palace, the Neapolitan ships of war in the harbor, besides several war vessels flying the British flag. He noticed the enemy's camps and, considering their extent, could not conceive how his general could prevail against them. He observed their positions and saw that they were on the farther side of the city, while the declivity on which he stood led down to the narrow street on the hither side that had been left without protection. All this he considered, and it occurred to him that it would be well for his general to know what was before him.

By this time darkness had come on, and he determined to take advantage of it to ride back to inform Garibaldi of what he had seen.

There was another road leading toward the revolutionists which joined the one on which they were advancing. Guardet made for this road. Just as he was about to ride into it, looking over an open space, he saw the dark forms of men marching westward.

"Aha!" exclaimed Guardet to himself. "A force is moving by this road either to strike the general on the flank or cut him off. We shall see about this."

For some distance the road on which these troops were marching lay over partly open ground, and Guardet hoped to catch them by surprise. He appeared now and again to the soldiers as a white mass moving in the same direction as themselves. He was minded to block the road before them to delay or turn them back, but he remembered that their leader would be at their head, and, being of superior intelligence, was not likely to be frightened by an apparition. So he fell back to the rear with a view to detaching some portion of the force. When the dawn was far enough advanced to enable the troops to see him he put himself on the road between the militia body and a company marching a short distance in the rear. A bomb dropping among them could not have more effectually scattered them.

Without waiting for them to investigate him Guardet, who every moment was becoming more convinced of the importance of bearing the information, he possessed to his general, crossed from the road on which the Neapolitans were marching to the one on which Garibaldi was advancing and during the morning took position at a point where the general must pass. He had not waited long when the head of the revolutionary column came in sight. Guardet rode to meet them, and the skirmish line melted away like ice under the rays of a hot sun. Guardet kept on causing a commotion in the little army till he approached the general and his staff.

"What's this?" the general demanded. "Who are you who have rigged yourself like a phantom?"

"I am Private Giuseppe Guardet taken in yesterday's fight by King Bomba's men. I escaped and hid in a mill. That's what gives me a ghostly appearance. I have been to the crest of the hill overlooking Palermo and have noted several features that it may be well for you to know."

"What are they?"
 "There must be 20,000 troops in Palermo, but they are all near the palace at the other end of the city. There is a fleet of war vessels in the harbor, some of them bearing the English flag."

"English?"
 "Yes, general."

"Go on."

"The part of the town nearest the foot of the declivity is unguarded. You may find an entrance on that side."

"Anything else?"

"A force has been sent out to intercept you. It is marching by another road."

"They have gone on a fool's errand. Thank you, Private Guardet. You cut a ridiculous figure, but you have brought me valuable information."

The general rode on, and Guardet took position beside the road. As the soldiers passed, now knowing that he was harmless, he was greeted with shouts of laughter.

History tells how Garibaldi after a long fight on the streets of Palermo finally forced the evacuation of King Bomba's army, thus striking the first and the main blow for Italian unity.

Attacked by Shepherd Dog.

Mrs. Cover Eckenrode, of near Mr. Rock, this county, was severely bitten by a Shepherd dog. The dog had attacked a cat, and when Mrs. Eckenrode interfered the animal turned on her. The dog made a plunge for her throat and when Mrs. Eckenrode threw up her arm to keep it from catching her neck, the animal caught the arm and held fast until the woman's screams brought her husband from the barn.

Mr. Eckenrode seized a club and struck the animal over the head, releasing its jaws, after which he killed the dog. In the encounter with the ferocious animal Mrs. Eckenrode's clothing was torn from her body and the dog's teeth severely lacerated her hip and left arm.

The lady, who is subject to fainting spells, fell unconscious in the yard, and was removed to the house, after which Dr. A. C. Rice of McSherrystown was summoned. He promptly cauterized the wounds. The doctor was unable to tell if the dog had hydrophobia, as the brains of the beast were so scattered by Mr. Eckenrode's club that it was impossible to have them examined.

The dog was a very valuable one, having been trained to drive the cattle from the field to the barn without any assistance. It was always of a very friendly disposition and never before attempted to attack anyone.

Mrs. Eckenrode is resting as well as can be expected considering her severe injuries and the nervous shock to which she was subjected.

An Unusual Offer.

"It isn't often that I have faith enough in the medicine put up by other people to be willing to offer to refund the money if it does not cure," said L. M. Buehler to a COMPLEX man who dropped into his store, "but I am glad to sell Dr. Howard's specific for the cure of constipation and dyspepsia on that basis."

"The Dr. Howard Company in order to get a quick introductory sale, authorizes me to sell their regular fifty-cent bottles at half-price, 25 cents, and, although I have sold a lot of it, and have guaranteed every package, not one has been brought back as unsatisfactory."

"I am still selling the specific at half-price, although I cannot tell how long I shall be able to do so, and anyone who is subject to constipation, sick headache, dizziness, liver trouble, indigestion or a general played out condition, ought to take advantage of this chance. You can tell your readers that if they are not satisfied with the specific that they can come right back to my store and I will cheerfully refund their money."

NEW LIGHT ON ORDERS GIVEN BY GEN. LEE AT GETTYSBURG

The Love Letter of a Confederate
General the Day of Fight Tells the Story.

The battle of Gettysburg as every schoolboy knows practically decided the war of the rebellion. There has always been bitter controversy between the Southern generals who took part in this world famous battle as to who was to blame for the ill-advised assault upon the impregnable position of the Union troops which resulted so disastrously to the Southern cause. New light is shed on this interesting question in "Pictorial Review" for December, wherein is published the second instalment of "The Love Letters of a Confederate General," in which the blame for forcing the battle is clearly put up to General Lee. These letters were written by a world famous General to the woman who later became his wife. The situation at Gettysburg is described as follows, on the day preceding the final assault:

"All three sent regards to you, and Old Lewis pulled a ring from his little finger and making me take it, said, 'Give this little token, George, please, to her of the sunset eyes, with my love, and tell her the 'old man' says since he could not be the lucky dog he's mighty glad that you are.' Dear Old Lewis—dear old Lo, as Magruder always called him, being short for Lohario. Well, my Chubie, I'll keep the ring for you, and some day I'll take it to John Tyler and have it made into a breastpin and set around with rubies and diamonds and emeralds. You will be the pearl, the other jewel. Dear old Lewis!

Just as we three separated to go our different ways after silently clasping hands, our fears and prayers voiced in the "Good Luck, old man," a summons came from Old Peter (Longstreet) and I immediately rode to the top of the ridge where he and Marse Robert were making a reconnaissance of Meade's position. "Great God!" said Old Peter as I came up. "Look, General Lee, at the insurmountable difficulties between our line and that of the Yankees—the steep hills, the tiers of artillery, the fences, the heavy skirmish line—and then we'll have to fight our infantry against their batteries. Look at the ground we'll have to charge over, nearly a mile of that open ground there under the rain of their canister and shrapnel."

"The enemy is there, General Longstreet, and I am going to strike him," said Marse Robert in his firm, quiet, determined voice.

About 8 o'clock I rode with them along our line of prostrate infantry. They had been told to lie down to prevent attracting attention, and though they had been forbidden to cheer they voluntarily arose and lifted in reverential adoration their caps to our beloved commander as we rode slowly along. Oh, the responsibility for the lives of so many men, these were my darling, their fate and that of our beloved Southland will be settled ere your glorious, brown eyes rest on these scraps of penciled paper—your Soldier's last letter, perhaps.

Our line of battle faces Cemetery Ridge. Our detachments have been thrown forward to support our artillery which stretches over a mile along the crests of Oak Ridge and Seminary Ridge. The men are lying in the rear, my darling, and the hot July sun pours scorching rays almost vertically down upon them. The suffering and waiting is almost unbearable. Now and then an olive branch of hope in the shape of a courier bearing a message revives them.

Well, my sweetheart, at 1 o'clock the awful silence was broken by a cannon shot and then another, and then more than a hundred guns shook the hills from crest to base, answered by more than another hundred—the whole world a blazing volcano, the whole heaven a thunderbolt—then darkness and absolute silence—then the grim and gruesome, low spoken commands—then the forming of the attacking columns, the hurrying of the men to the positions assigned to them. My brave Virginians are to attack in front. Oh, God, in mercy help me as he never helped before!

I have ridden up to report to Old Peter. I shall give him this letter to mail to you and a package to give you if— Oh, darling, do you feel the love of my heart, the prayer, as I write that fatal word—"if?"

Now, my darling, I go; but remember always that I love you with all my heart and soul, with every fiber of my being; that now and forever I am yours—yours, my beloved. It is almost 3 o'clock. My soul reaches out to yours—my prayers. I'll keep up a shooom-tum-tum for Virginia and for you, my darling.

Your Soldier Lover.

A Young Woman Cleaned up a Town

In the December "Woman's Home Companion" appears an article about Virginia Brooks of West Hammond, Illinois, who has done a great work which is partly described in the following extract from the article:

"Miss Brooks was leading the pleasant life of a Chicago girl in comfortable circumstances when a notice assessing herself and her mother two thousand dollars on some vacant lots that they owned in the neighboring town of West Hammond, Illinois, strengthened certain suspicions in her mind that the rulers of that town were not all they should be. Subsequent investigations confirmed those suspicions to such an extent that Miss Brooks and her mother closed their Chicago home and moved into a little cottage in West Hammond to see what was to be done about it. It appeared that the town, with a young population of 750, supported fifty-five saloons, with all varieties of objectionable resorts in due proportion. Largely on account of overtaxation, the result of extensive graft, there were in the southern half of the town but twenty-five houses free of mortgage. Moreover, the ruling powers now proposed that the town be incorporated as a city, for the purpose, Miss Brooks inferred, of enabling the controlling element still further to increase the burdens of taxation. Under such circumstances as any reformer could tell you, the proper thing to do was to 'appeal to the people.'

"Unlike many reformers, Miss Brooks knew how to appeal. In this instance 'the people' were mostly Poles. Miss Brooks began by learning their language. She then addressed them at public meetings with such effect that she completely won her impulsive, warm-hearted auditors. Not only was the incorporation project signally defeated, but Miss Brooks had so sturdy an army of Polish voters behind her that she felt strong enough to urge more active reforms.

"Fighting an organized ring is not an easy task, and Miss Brooks had many discouragements; but in the end the decent citizens were thoroughly awakened. A reform ticket was put into the field and won an overwhelming victory, and the last dive in West Hammond, called in derision 'The Virginia Brooks,' closed its doors."

Shall Voting be Compulsory.

After every fair allowance has been made, however, the fact is notorious that many citizens entitled to vote do not go to the polls. The registration figures often fall far below what they should be, and the ballots finally cast and counted reveal a surprisingly large number of indifferents or star-at-homes. Hence the demand, which seems to be a rising demand, says the December "Century," that the citizen be compelled by law to do his duty as an elector, if he will not do it unforced. Compulsory voting has been advocated of late by the Attorney-General of the United States. No one would class Mr. Wickersham among the impetuous laddists. He has studied European practice and precedents in the matter of inflicting penalties upon citizens who fail to exercise franchise, and favors the adoption of some modified form of such legislation in this country. The argument for it will certainly be greatly reinforced if we are widely to enter upon the experiment of law-making initiative and referendum. The people are sovereign, but if only a portion of them speak, how are we to know the real voice of authority? There have been elections some of them passing on statutes referred to the electorate, some on important constitutional changes, in which the votes of only a majority of a minority were effective. If that should become common, the case for compulsory voting would obviously be stronger.

Just Subbing for Bryan.

For two presidential campaigns Josephus Daniels has had charge of the Library Bureau of the Democratic National Committee. In a corner room on the sixth floor Josephus reigned during the past campaign, in command of a battalion of typewriters. Literature and photos of the campaign were being dispatched at a lively rate.

Photographs of the candidates and buttons were there for all. Judge Wade from Iowa was smoking a cigar and—thinking Someone was telling a joke on Josephus Daniels and everybody stopped to listen. Mr. Daniels had scarcely visited his home, since the Baltimore convention, but when he returned the old negro "mammy," who had been in his family for years, remarked to the colored man moving the lawn, "How well Marse Daniels am lookin' since he went down to New York."

"What's he been doin'?" asked the darkey.

"Don't you know?" incredulous.

"No never heard."

"Why, he is down there servin' with a society for 'lectin' Presidents."

When the information was given that Mr. Wilson was the Democratic candidate, the colored gentleman confidentially remarked in a whisper, "Eh, I thought Mr. Bryin generally ran fer President—On the Campaign Circuit," by Joe Mitchell Chappie, in "National Magazine."

A New Stunt for Burbank.

We're told that Burbank has a plum that grows and ripens on a stalk. They say he has a massive oak that blossoms like a hollyhock. Out in his garden there are Duchess apples growing on a vine.

He has a milkweed tree that daily gives a quart of turpentine. He plants potatoes in the ground, and when he digs them with a spade he runs them through a cider press and gets wine of the highest grade.

He makes peach orchards grow where he sets out a row of wooden stakes. And from the spineless cactus he a new kind of alfalfa makes:

His ice plants grow refrigerator cars and lovely skating rinks:

His palm trees all bear oranges, and blossom like carnation plinks.

By grafting prunes and pumpkin pies he raises shortcake, so they say:

He crosses lightning bugs and grows electric plants in that way.

There seems to be no doubt but that he is the wonder of the age.

And in the annals of the world the things he's done deserve a page. He's led a mighty useful life: he's given us good things to eat.

And there is only one thing he should do to make his life complete.

The whole world will be grateful if he'll spend the last days of his life designing us a garden pea that will not roll from off our knife.

—Howard C. Kestley in "Farm and Home."

Beautiful America for the Artists.

And now, after thirty years, I have come to hold New York the most beautiful city in the world; Not Paris, nor London, nor Rome, nor Antwerp can, in my opinion, compare with it, either in color, in effect, or in the unexpected character and beauty of its piled-up buildings. Even the admitted charm of Venice becomes somewhat petty by comparison; for mere picturesqueness does not necessarily connote beauty, and a scene which will make an excellent picture-postcard will not always make an excellent picture. I soon found that what was true of New York City was equally true of our American landscape in general. The quality of its beauty differed wholly from that of northern Europe, but it was equally adapted to pictorial expression on canvas. It had only to be approached by a sympathetic temperament and with unprejudiced eyes to yield limitless material for the painter's art. And, inasmuch as nature's moods on this side of the ocean are infinitely more varied than they are abroad, they lend themselves to the most divergent artistic temperament and permit of a very wide range of personal expression in art.—From "The Field of Art," in Christmas "Scribner."

Highland Dixie.

The mountaineers of the South are marked apart from all other folks by dialect, by customs, by character, by self-conscious isolation. So true is this that they call outsiders "furriners." It matters not whether your descent be from Puritan or Cavalier, whether you come from Boston or Chicago, Savannah or New Orleans, in the mountains you are a "furriner." A traveler, puzzled and scandalized at this, asked a native of the Cumberlandlands what he would call a "Dutchman or a Dago." The fellow studied a bit and then replied: "Them's the outlandish."

Foreigner, outlander, it is all one; we are "different," we are "quar," to the mountaineer. He knows he is an American; but his conception of the metes and bounds of America is vague to the vanishing point. As for countries overseas—well, when a celebrated Nebraskan returned from his trip around the globe, one of my backwoods neighbors proudly informed me; "I see they give Bryan a lot of receptions when he kem back from the other world."—Horace Kephart in the December "Outing."

Fairy Tales in a Garden.

A writer in "Suburban Life" for December describes a wonderful garden in Pasadena, in which the owner, who loves to see children happy, has placed statuettes of the fairy folk dear to childish hearts. Beneath the trees one may find Red Riding Hood with a basket of goodies on her arm, in company with the wicked wolf; then coming to a small lake surrounded by trees, a little house is visible; this is the home of Snow-White and the Seven Dwarfs. The group shows Snow-White seated outside the house and the tiny men all about her listening to tales of her former life in the king's palace. A little way from "Snow-White" and "Red Riding Hood" on the side of a hill, lives the fox family of Goethe "Reineke Fuchs." The fourth group perhaps is the most popular. It represents Hansel and Gretel at the gingerbread house in the woods. The children are in the midst of a delightful feast when the evil old witch appears.

Governor Reappointing Judges.

Under the recent amendment to the Constitution, Judges cannot be elected in even-numbered years and all whose terms expire with such a year must either hold over by reappointment or be succeeded by an appointee of the Governor until an election can be held in the odd-numbered year. The terms of eight Judges expire this year, five common pleas and three orphans' court Governor Tever declared Monday of last week that he did not believe in the Progressive policy of recall. He therefore will not exercise the prerogative of recalling any of the eight Judges who must be appointed for a year. It is his purpose to reappoint all of the incumbents as a Christmas surprise.

On Jan. 1, 1915 the terms of nine Judges will expire, among others Judge S. McC. Swope of the Adams-Fulton district and if Governor Tever remains of the same opinion as expressed above he would reappoint Judge Swope to serve from Jan. 1, 1915 to Jan. 1 1916, and the election of a judge for this district will come off in Nov 1915.

Catarrh and Blood Disease - Doctors Failed to Cure.

Miss Mabel F. Dawkins, 1214 Lafayette St., Fort Wayne, Ind., writes: "For three years I was troubled with catarrh and blood disease. Flag Over Federal Building.
The stone work on the Federal building was completed on last Friday, and the event was celebrated by flying the Stars and Stripes from the flag pole that had been erected on the building. The derrick was taken down and roof was completed. The front and side steps have been practically finished. Work inside is steadily going forward. It is expected that the heat plant will soon be in operation so that the weather can not delay the inside work.

The Miller's Ghost

A Story of Garibaldi and the One Thousand

By F. A. MITCHEL

The union of the Italian states that occurred during the middle of the last century was accomplished by the united efforts of three different leaders who, strange to say, were not at all in accord, and in the case of two of them there was great antagonism. These three men were Victor Emmanuel, king of Sardinia; Count Cavour, his prime minister, and General Garibaldi. The king acted as a ruling head for the Italian people, Cavour's splendid diplomacy prevented the interference of foreign powers, and Garibaldi struck the blow.

When Garibaldi, at the head of 1,000 volunteers, landed on the Sicilian shore to support the revolution in that island and advanced eastward he fought a battle in which he was victorious, and the supporters of his enemy, the king of Naples, commonly called Bomba, retreated to Palermo, where the king's main army was located, protected by a fleet of war vessels in the harbor.

During this fight, when Garibaldi was advancing, an Italian soldier, Giuseppe Guardet, was captured by Bomba's troops. This Guardet was as much of a genius in a small strategic way as was his general in leading armies. Guardet was sent forward with other prisoners in the direction of Palermo that they might not be retaken by their advancing comrades. But in any event soldiers in retreat do not make the best of guards, and Guardet, who had been wounded, pretending that he could not keep up with his captors, lagged behind and when he saw that he was unobserved by those hurrying on ahead of him sank down behind some bushes.

If the prisoner had been in the rear instead of in advance of the retreating army he would have needed only to wait for Garibaldi to come up. As it was, he must conceal himself till the main body and rear guard of the royal troops had passed on. As soon as he ceased to hear the confused sounds of the guard ahead of him he sprang up, notwithstanding his wound which was not in a vital part, and ran as fast as his legs could carry him into a wood beside the road on which he had been marching. Sicily is a mountainous country, and he was on a slope at the foot of mountains, a stream running through it down to the plains below. Following this stream he came to a water mill.

Guardet found the mill deserted except for a donkey hitched to a post, on whose back were several bags of flour evidently intended for delivery. Inside grain and flour were in bags and in heaps.

The fugitive, seeing that he had found a good hiding place, threw himself down on the bags of flour to rest and, being exhausted, fell asleep. He was soon awakened by voices and, starting, ran up a pair of stairs to the upper part of the mill, where he found a large heap of flour. The voices came nearer till he could hear them directly below. Guardet burrowed into the flour, leaving only a breathing space for his nose at the back part of the pile, where it would not likely be noticed. The comers were chattering below, and the hidden soldier learned that they were Neapolitan soldiers. He had been missed almost as soon as he had dropped behind, and these men had been sent back for him. Noticing that the mill was a good hiding place, they searched it. When they came up the stairs Guardet withdrew even his nose under the flour and held his breath. They did not think of looking for a man in such a place, and Guardet had the satisfaction of hearing them go away.

As soon as he was free to come out from his hiding place he did so, while as the flour that had shielded him. Going into a little room where the miller kept his accounts, he found a fragment of looking glass fastened to the wall and by it saw that his face was like that of a corpse. Wiping the flour from his forehead with his hand, which was covered with blood from his wound, he left a smudge of blood congealed with flour. Then the idea of playing the part of a ghost, if necessary to effect his escape, occurred to him, and he daubed himself here and there with blood, and with some ink he found beside the miller's account books blackened the sockets of his eyes.

Surveying his image in the mirror he lost all fear of capture, for, knowing well the superstition of Italians, he felt sure he could easily put to flight a whole army of them.

The sun was now low behind the mountains, and Guardet concluded to sally forth with a view to working his way backward to rejoin his comrades. Leaving the mill, he saw the donkey still patiently standing tied to the post, and it occurred to him that there was no need for him to walk when he could as well ride. To heighten the ghostly effect he emptied the bags of flour over his head, with the exception of one bag, which he left in its place for a saddle. Then, mounting, he guided the little beast down to the road.

There he hesitated. If he rode to ward Garibaldi's army and failed to frighten the coming Neapolitans it would be all up with him. It might be all. He is equally familiar with both weapons.

"Reckon he is," replied Tuttle. "It isn't likely that the paper would give such a job to a man who didn't know his business."

"Monsieur is quite right. Upon inquiry he will learn that M. Cavillat is one of the best swordsmen and shots not only in Paris, but in Europe."

"You've got everything fixed to bleed any one you choose, haven't you?"

The interpreter pretended not to hear this. M. Cavillat assumed a bored look and returned to his novel. Tuttle, a martial spirit, that had been cultivated during the war with Mexico, was slowly looming up in his bosom. He remembered how the corps of "squirrel hunters," as they were called, to which he had belonged were relied upon by General Taylor to pick off the Mexican leaders and how they accomplished their task. The blood was slowly mounting to the American's cheeks, and fire was lighting up his eye.

"Now, see here," he said, bringing his fist down on the table. "This yere thing has got to stop. If any more of it appears in your paper I'll take care of that waxed mustached gentleman in the American fashion. Good mornin'!"

Turning on his heel, he departed from the office of the Courier, leaving the interpreter to deliver his message.

The next morning the Courier printed another article about Tuttle's raid that was worse than the first. His bankers informed him that in view of these attacks it would be useless for them to offer the bonds. They would not be taken by the public.

"What can I do to stop the assaults?" asked Tuttle.

"Give them a thousand franc advertisement."

"We don't do such things in America."

"You Americans have not yet learned the way affairs are arranged in other countries."

"Hold on a few days. Don't do anything till I let you know."

The manager of the Courier, not having received a reply to his fighting editor's challenge and thinking he had a good chance to clutch matters, sent a message to Tuttle stating that if he did not send a written apology to be printed in the journal he would publish an article showing how, for having protected the French public from an American swindle, they had been subject to insult and a demand for satisfaction had been unheeded.

"Just you wait a minute," he said to the messenger, "and I'll give you an answer to take back with you."

Then he sat down at a desk and indited the following epistle:

Manager of the Courier des—

Monsieur—I have decided to accept the challenge of your fighting editor. I understand that I have the choice of weapons, but I don't want to get the bog, so I'll give your fighting editor a choice between two kinds of fight that has been tried often in the state of Kentucky. The first plan is bowie knives in a dark room; the second is rifles at from 80 to 1,000 yards. Respectively yours,

EZEKIEL TUTTLE.

There is no record as to the reception of this note in the Courier office. No reply was made for some time. When it came it expressed surprise that Mr. Tuttle should suppose it either of such barbarous plans as he had proposed would be acceptable in a civilized country like France. Wouldn't he name some other plan that could be accepted by a gentleman? To this Tuttle wrote that the only other plan in such matters in vogue in America that he (Tuttle) approved of was "over a handkerchief," which meant that two seconds held a handkerchief between the disputants, who fought with pistols as near together as that would allow. His opponents were at liberty to choose that method if they liked in preference to the two others he had named, but for his part he thought the distance between the parties was mighty small.

Mr. Tuttle waited patiently for a further reply. It did not come, but the next day a gentleman called on the American, who introduced himself as M. Dumont, a member of a Paris club to which all disputed points of the code duello were referred. He called to assure M. Tuttle that plans of fighting had been referred to a committee of which he had the honor to be chairman and that the committee had decided that M. Cavillat was bound to fight on those terms. This was communicated in bad English.

"Look here, monsieur," said Tuttle. "I didn't ask M. Cavillat to fight; I asked me. But since I'm in for this yere muss I'm going through with it. You go tell him that if he don't accept one or t'other of the two plans I've offered before sundown I'll withdraw 'em and insist on a fight over a handkerchief."

"Mon Dieu," exclaimed the Frenchman, "Americans are like ze wild men d'Afrique!" So indignant was he that he forgot to low himself out. Tuttle, who gave up all expectation of the fighting editor meeting him on his own terms, notified his bankers to proceed with their preparations for placing his bonds.

The next move on the part of the Courier party was to send an invitation to Mr. Tuttle to a conference to take place in the editor's office. Upon the American's arrival he was informed that they had been mistaken as to the investment he was about to offer and if he would withdraw the charges of blackmail he had made they would publish an article stating that financiers had pronounced his bonds a good investment and the probabilities were that the loan would be largely oversubscribed.

This ended the matter. The Courier approved of the loan. Tuttle of his own accord gave them an ad., and the bonds were all taken. Tuttle went back with a couple of hundred thousand dollars' commission and became a famous and rich man.

Mission Weddings.

Within two minutes after the cab stopped at the mistletoe door the report spread up and down the street that a wedding was taking place inside. Within another two minutes the room was packed to the very doors. That sudden rush of the crowd to the sanctuary pleased the mission superintendent.

"If I had money to spare," he said, "I would pay a bonus to young couples for getting married in a mission. The moral effect of one wedding is worth a dozen sermons. To get the best effect the ceremony ought to be performed in the middle of the service. No innovation that I have ever introduced has had such a sobering effect on the congregation. The example of a man once as far down in the social scale as themselves having become sufficiently regenerated to assume the responsibilities of life strikes every bit of manhood there is in them."

"The trouble is, I can persuade very few couples to be married in a mission. The bridegrooms do not mind, but the brides want something more exclusive."—New York Times.

Mrs. Peppy's Temper.

Being at supper my wife did say something that caused me to oppose her in. She used the word devil, which vexed me, and, among other things, I said I would not have her to use that word, upon which she took me up most scornfully, which, before Ashwell and the rest of the world, I know not nowadays how to check, as I would heretofore, for less than that would have made me strike her. So that I fear without great discretion I shall go near to lose, too, my command over her, and nothing do it more than giving her this occasion of dancing and other pleasures, whereby her mind is taken up from her business and finds other sweets best pleasing of me, and so makes her that she begins not at all to take pleasure in me or study to please me as heretofore. — Diary of Samuel Pepys.

Two Tales of Macready.

It is not always well to strut and fret one's little hour upon the stage too realistically. Macready, who threw himself into his acting heart and soul, used to tell funny stories about the effect of his easy, colloquial manner upon the players collected for his company in small provincial towns. Once in the play of "William Tell" he turned to one of these stupid rustics and put the question, "Do you shoot?" so naturally that the man was quite thrown off his guard and, to his horror, replied, "A little, sir, but I've never had a go with one of them cross-bows." Another time in "Virgilius" he asked, "Do you wait for me to lead Virginia in, or will you do so?" only to be greeted unexpectedly by the actor who played Iolius with, "Why really, sir, I don't care—just as you do it in London."

A Daftly in Fiji.

The styles in Fiji may not concern us deeply, and of course we may not copy any of them except in a swimming tank. Still, they have styles. A returning traveler, interviewed in London, says the prevailing mode is "two yards of blue jeans combined with a chintz pattern—this for the men. The real pacemakers among the women wear silk pinafores, 'in town' (meaning Suva), whereas in the country there is no silk and possibly no pinafore.

The beach is the promenade in the Polynesian islands, and there the traveler found the Fijian Berry Wall. He wore rousers and boots, a collar (but no shirt) and a top hat. Naturally, on account of the topper, the observation was made late in the day.—Chicago Post.

A Good Eater.

When Gustavus of Sweden was besieging Prague a boor of extraordinary aspect gained admittance to his tent and offered, by way of amusing his majesty, to devour a large hog in his presence. Old General Konigsmark, who was in attendance, at once suggested that the man with the gargantuan appetite should be burned as a witch, whereupon the boor, whose feelings were hurt by this observation, exclaimed, "If your majesty will but make that old gentleman take off his sword and spurs I will eat him before I begin the pig." This was accompanied by such a "hideous expansion of the jaws and mouth" that the general, though he had given his "proofs" on many a field, turned pale and fled uncontrollably to his tent.

An Odd Moorish Custom.

As a people the Moors are already well inclined to anything that adds life. A correspondent says: "Nothing delights them more as a means of agreeably spending an hour or two than squatting on their heels in the streets or on some door stoop, gazing at the passersby, exchanging compliments with their acquaintances. Native 'swells' consequently promenade with a piece of felt under their arms, on which to sit when they wish."

Attached.

"How do you like me for a travelling companion?" asked the detective as he handcuffed his prisoner to himself. "Oh, I'm very much attached to you," replied the prisoner promptly.

The Usual Result.

Origin of the New York Yacht Club.

Shortly after the Revolution Colonel Stevens purchased Hoboken, which was then an island of swamps and rocky hills, and established the family on Castle point, a beautiful promontory overlooking the Hudson and New York city. John C. Stevens, the father of American yachting, was born there in 1785. There were no ferries in those days, and the Stevens boys of necessity became expert boatmen. At fourteen John C. owned a sailboat of twenty feet length named Diver. As the years passed by he had the schooner Glimmer built for him by William Capes in Hoboken. This boat is one of the most historic craft of American yachting, since she was the cradle of the New York Yacht club, the organization being accomplished in her cabin only July 30, 1844, the year in which so many of the world's greatest achievements occurred. On that day John C. Stevens called a meeting of yachtsmen, which assembled aboard the Glimmer, anchored off the Battery, New York, and here the constitution of the New York Yacht club was drawn up—Strand Magazine.

Anagrams.

The anagram, or transposition of the letters in words or sentences, was much in vogue in Greece in the olden times. The Cabalists, or Jewish doctors, thought that the anagram always pointed out a man's destiny, and if his name written backward or transposed in any way spelled a word with meaning they firmly believed it a revelation. The Battered of James I. of England proved his right to the British monarchy as the descendant of the mythical King Arthur from his name, Charles James Stuart, which becomes "claims Arthur's seat." The best anagrams are those which have in the new order of letters some significance appropriate to that from which they are formed. When Pilate asked "Quid est veritas?" (What is truth?) he probably had no idea that his question answered itself, but it did. The transposition made it "Est vir qui adest" (It is the man who is here). "Anagrams" were written as early as 250 B. C., and their name comes from the Greek words ana (backward) and gramma (writing).

Duels Over Trivialities.

The trivialities which led to duels in the old days were almost infinite. John Ashton mentions some of them in noting that by William IV's time public opinion was setting against the practice. "Colonel Montgomery was shot in a duel about a dog. Captain Ramsay in one about a servant. Mr. Fetherston in one about a recruit. Sterne's father in one about a goose and some one else about an 'acre of anchovies' instead of 'artichokes.' One officer was challenged for merely asking his opponent to have another glass, and another was compelled to fight about a pinch of snuff, while General Barry was challenged by a Captain Smith for declining a glass of wine with him at dinner on a steamboat, although the general had pleaded in excuse that wine invariably made him sick at sea"—London Chronicle.

He Aroused Them.

When Samuel S. Collier was preaching in an old log schoolhouse in Johnson county, Missouri, in 1852, his congregation was quite small. One Sunday all were sitting at the desks forward near the pulchre floor. The sermon was monotonous and the old log seats had no backs. Observing the sleepy, downcast look of the congregation, the minister woke them up by shouting, "Arouse, heaven is not under the floor!"

FARM FOR SALE.

The undersigned executor of John Hammers, dec'd, late of Highland township, Pa., will sell at private sale the farm 2 1-2 miles west of Gettysburg, Pa., called the Sunnyside Farm, containing about 100 acres of land, about 80 acres of land clear as any garden, the rest in young tall timber, poplar, oak and hickory. This farm can be bought cheap. Part of the money can remain in the place. The interest in 20 acres of growing grain can go with the place. Fruit experts say there is no land within the State better adapted for a fruit farm than this. This farm planted in apple and peach trees would bring $10,000 in a few years. If not sold by the first of Jan., 1913, for rent. Farmers all around this asking from $2,000 to $3,000 more than asked for this farm. This farm produces a good crop without lime and fertilizers as many farms of like size with, which speaks well for the soil.
